[1] Students in this course learn hands-on skills that will allow them to become advocates for intersectional gender justice in their communities and workplaces. Students will learn skills that will enable them to critique social issues using an intersectional gender lens, envision just and equitable futures, and develop an identifiable set of DEIJ/cultural agility skills for use in communities* such as workplaces. * By "communities" we mean interconnected systems of people or institutions that share common spaces, goals, or hierarchies. These can take various forms, including local communities, workplaces, educational institutions, online communities, cultural and identity-based communities, or advocacy and activist communities.

[2] At least 12 of the 20 credits taken for the minor must be at either the 200 or 300-level. No more than 2 courses should be taken from the same department.

[3] Any course listed as a Foundations course or a Gender Studies in Action course may also count as an elective if taken in addition to the required courses, including those from the categories above that exceed the minimum requirements.
